Émile-Antoine Bourdelle and the Midi Colin Nelson-Dusek 2020 This dissertation addresses how the sculptor Emile-Antoine Bourdelle (1861-1929) displayed his status as a French southerner through his art while also considering the changing notions of regional identity in turn-of-the-century France. It covers the period 1884-1915 and examines Bourdelle's sculpture, paintings, drawings, poetry, and letters. Interpretation of the artist's work, as well as the way he reacted to new understandings of the French south, is developed through primary sources like art criticism and correspondence from fellow artists, patrons, and writers. Secondary material, like historical, cultural, and philosophical studies, and Bourdelle's comparison to contemporary artists and intellectuals, are used to support arguments.
