Intermediate Logic James B. Nance 1996 Logic has been defined both as the science and the art of correct reasoning. People who study different sciences observe a variety of things: biologists observe living organisms, astronomers observe the heavens, and so on. From their observations they seek to discover natural laws by which God governs his creation. The person who studies logic as a science observes the mind as it reasons -- as it draws conclusions from premises -- and from those observations discovers laws of reasoning which God has placed in the minds of people. Specifically, he seeks to discover the principles or laws which may be used to distinguish good reasoning from poor reasoning. In deductive logic, good reasoning is valid reasoning -- in which the conclusions follow necessarily from the premises. Logic as a science discovers the principles of valid and invalid reasoning. - Introduction.
